

Notes on Contributors

Caroline Hughes is a lecturer in the Department of Political Science and International Studies at the University of Birmingham. She has been conducting research on the political processes associated with Cambodia's emergence from civil conflict for the past ten years. She is the author of The Political Economy of Cambodia's Transition (London: RoutledgeCurzon 2003) and articles in journals such as Critical Asian Studies, Democratization and Third World Quarterly. She is currently working on an Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) project comparing the impact of international intervention on postwar politics in Cambodia and East Timor.

Fidelx Pius Kulipossa is currently a lecturer at Eduardo Mondlane University, Maputo, an adviser to the Board of Directors of GAPI (a leading development finance institution for the promotion of small and medium-sized enterprises in Mozambique), and a freelance researcher and consultant. He holds a DPhil degree from the University of Sussex. His main current research interests include the democratisation process in Mozambique, political and institutional aspects of poverty reduction, financing small- and medium-sized enterprises, regional integration in Southern Africa, and peace, power and conflict resolution in international politics.

Mark Robinson is a Fellow in the Governance Team at IDS. He is a political sociologist with extensive research and operational experience in South Asia and East Africa. His broad areas of research interest include governance, democracy and civil society, with particular interests in civil society and public policy and the politics of governance reform. His advisory and operational work has focused on decentralisation and political participation and civil society approaches to governance reform. Publications include more than 30 articles and book chapters and four jointly authored and edited books.

Andrew Rosser is a Fellow in the Governance Team at IDS. He is a political economist and works mainly on Southeast Asia and Indonesia in particular. His recent publications include 'Economic Crisis and the Political Economy of Economic Liberalisation in South-East Asia' (with Kanishka Jayasuriya) in G. Rodan et al. (eds), The Political Economy of South-East Asia: Conflicts, Crises and Change (Oxford: OUP 2001), 'Indonesia: the Politics of Inclusion' (with Kurnya Roesad and Donni Edwin), Journal of Contemporary Asia 35.1 2005, and 'The Political Economy of Corporate Governance in Indonesia' in Ho Khai Leong (ed.) Reforming Corporate Governance in Southeast Asia (Singapore: ISEAS 2005).